Becky:

I spoke to Senator Plale about your question. You can ignore the second proposed change and just have the sentence read: "the approximate time and date that the pesticide is to be applied."

Thank you.

Shannon,

I'm not sure what is intended by the second proposed change. Is it intended to mean something like "if weather conditions are favorable"? (I'm not sure how much that adds to the current provision.) Or should that line say something like "The date that the pesticide is to be applied and a period of time on that date during which the pesticide is to be applied, depending on when the weather conditions are favorable." If neither of those conveys what is wanted, could you describe, or have someone else describe, what the concern is?

I looked at DATCP's rules to see whether there was a model for this provision. Several DATCP rules require advance notice of pesticide applications, but I do not see that any of them mention weather conditions.

Thanks,
